FIRM HAND

PATIENCE and firmness must continue to be exercised in handling the teachers, students and other obstructive elements in the Rennie's Mill Refugee Camp area. They should be told as often as seems necessary the true purposes of the Government, which is really to bring modern improvements and amenities to the place with the least possible disturbance of the present conditions.

The inhabitants of the area are among the unfortunate who have had better fortune than many others. They have managed virtually to annex a large area of choice land, foreshore, and delightful prospect and to build quite a little empire upon it. This they have done with their own hands.

It is a far better thing they have done than to build miserable shanties on roof-tops or hill-sides. The whole place presents a far different appearance from the clusters of wretched huts ascending the slopes above Causeway Bay.

The first contingent were sent there nearly a decade ago because of the plight of the homeless and defeated soldiers, swarming around the slopes of Mount Davis, aroused general sympathy and concern. The regime in Taiwan has too many other worries to take in all of them, as they might have been expected to do.

Since then much has been done for them and they have done much for themselves. Church and welfare bodies rallied to their help. They have fared as well as other refugee groups in this respect, and perhaps better than most. The Colony has reason to acknowledge their good behaviour and the refugees have every reason to be grateful for all that has been done for them.

IT may seem to many a poor recognition of the benefits the camp inhabitants have received to adopt a policy of passive strike, as the students and shops have been doing.

No doubt many are uneasy about the Government's announcement. Allowance must be made for this. Their sentimental attachment to the name of the camp is not to be despised and, moreover, conforms to the name—in part at least—by which this place has been known ever since a mill was erected there. The survey may reveal that many are not refugees at all, but simple free-renters. For the time being, presumably, all would be treated alike.

No plan can be shown to the people pending completion of the survey, but no harm would be done in putting up a few pictorial illustrations showing the contrast between old squatter areas and the modern transformation effected therein, with roads, water, light and other amenities laid on.

At the same time further measures should be taken to make it clear to all that while the Government intends to institute modern amenities it cannot do so unless it resumes administrative rights, and that it is wrong for the inhabitants to try and live outside the law. Those who live within the law must be expected to pay for it. It is this that is probably the real obstacle. People who have existed tax-free for a long time rejoice in such freedom. No doubt there will be no especial haste in imposing other taxes than ground rent. But not even the most unfortunate has the right to commandeer a great area of land.

Poles seize pamphlets BBC CLOSES STAND AT POZNAN FAIR

Poznan, June 11. The British Broadcasting Corporation stand at the Poznan Fair was closed down tonight after Polish customs officials seized large numbers of pamphlets displayed on the stand.

Mr J. Bilinski, who is in Poznan to run the BBC stand, said: "It is a waste of time to carry on without the hundreds of specially printed pamphlets, which list BBC special broadcasts to Poland."

EXCEPTION

Polish officials said the Polish government took exception to two photographs in the pamphlet, those of Mr Bilinski and a Mr Rosanek. The officials declared that both men took a leading part in "cold war" broadcasts in 1950-52.

The British Ambassador, Sir George Lisle Clutton, immediately lodged a protest with Mr Witold Trampeczynski, Polish Foreign Trade Minister who opened the fair.

In a letter handed to the British Ambassador the Polish authorities objected to six photographs in the pamphlet. Without its pamphlets the BBC stand looked bare and uninteresting, with large blank spaces. Nearly all that remained were large colour photographs of Queen Elizabeth taken during her state visit to India earlier this year.—Reuters.

Nigerian editor fined

Lagos, June 11.

The High Court here yesterday fined the editor of the Sunday Express, Mr Adpo Fotogun, £100 with the alternative of six months' jail on a charge of publishing a seditious and false article against the Nigerian Federal Government.

The court also fined Amalgamated Press, publishers of the Sunday Express, £100.

TAX LEAKAGE

The charge arose out of an article published on December 18 last and relating to an allegation of leakage of tax changes introduced towards the end of last year by the Federal Finance Minister, Mr Festus S. Okotie-Eboh.

Mr Justice G. B. A. Coker, presiding, said in his judgment that the article left the reader with a sense of condemnation of the Federal Government, and that its contents were false in order to cause fear and alarm in the mind of the public.—China Mail Special.

Five feet from death

Oakland, June 11.

An 80-year-old man and his wife escaped death by only five feet when a 190-pound auxiliary fuel tank plummeted 3,000 feet from a navy fighter plane through the roof of a garage.

The couple, Mr and Mrs Leroy Weed, were sitting in their kitchen, next to the garage. The wife was just putting on dinner when there was an explosion, he said.—China Mail Special.

Near-disaster over North Atlantic

Prestwick, June 11.

While passengers watched 'without panic' the engine of a giant KLM Royal Dutch Airline DC-7, fell "in a great ball of flame" into the north Atlantic early today, as the crew battled to save the plane and its 73 passengers.

The story of the emergency was told by the American passengers aboard the plane, chartered by a Connecticut company for a flight to Amsterdam, who waited at the airport for a new flight after the crew of the plane had made a successful landing here.

A crew of investigators from Holland arrived here this afternoon to investigate the cause of the fire in the plane's engine. The fire broke out as the airliner was flying at 13,000 feet off the coast of northern Ireland.

The pilot and the crew of eight declared a full emergency, and ditching procedures were prepared for. As the plane dropped to 1,000 feet it was joined by an American Albatross amphibian from the airport here.

Mr James McKissock, of New London, Connecticut, told reporters that he had just finished his breakfast when "suddenly there was a tremendous vibration. What worried me was that earlier I had seen oil leaking on the port wing and I feared the wing would go on fire."

"The engine fell off 15 minutes later in a great ball of flame and smoke. We were glad to see the engine in a trail of smoke drop into the Atlantic," he added. Another passenger, Judy Wallace of Mystic, Connecticut, gave full credit to the stewardess and stewards for preventing panic.

"We knew this was a life or death matter," she said, "but everyone was well behaved and there was no panic at all. The two stewardesses and stewards walked up and down telling people not to worry."

Meanwhile the 38-year-old Captain Wilhelm Bellink and his crew were battling to feather the propeller. He slowed his speed and then asked the passengers to go through their emergency drill.

"This has never happened to me before," he said, "and I hope it never will again."

After the engine dropped off, the pilot and crew were able to resume their normal flying.

Final agreement to restart the conference came when Lord Home made a telephone call late tonight to Mr Gromyko to fix the terms of the message that they would send tomorrow to the Commission.

The British statesman's telephone conversation took place after he had held consultations over dinner with Mr Averell Harriman and Mr Jean Chuvet, chief of United States and French delegates. They were joined for coffee by Mr V. K. Krishna Menon, India's Defence Minister and chief delegate.—Reuters.

GRAVEDIGGER'S OBSESSION

Wolverhampton, June 11.

Because he lost his pet rabbit as a boy, a gravedigger thought no one should have pet rabbits. So he went out at night and systematically killed them, a court was told here.

The man admitted this in court when he admitted three offences of rabbit killing, and asked for 35 other similar offences to be taken into account. He was jailed for six months.—China Mail Special.

Policeman shot, seriously wounded

A would-be burglar shot and seriously wounded a policeman in Kowloon at about 3 o'clock this morning.

The shooting took place when the policeman, Li Chok-kam, PC1234, intercepted the man in a back alley in Dundas-street after a chase.

A struggle took place and the man knocked the policeman on the head with a sparrer, snatched his service revolver, and fired three shots at him. The man then dropped the weapon and ran away.

The policeman was shot twice in the abdomen and once in the thigh.

The policeman picked up the revolver, fired two shots at the running man and then collapsed.

Before the interception, the man tried to break into No. 302 Shanghai-street, first floor, when residents raised the alarm and gave chase.

The policeman, answering the alarm, came on the scene. He then chased the man.

The policeman was sent to Kowloon Hospital where his condition was said to be serious.

The Police have detained a suspect for questioning.

Geneva conference on Laos to resume

Geneva, June 11.

The stalled 14-power Laos conference will restart tomorrow at 1000 GMT, a British spokesman announced tonight.

The spokesman said that the Earl of Home, British Foreign Secretary, as chairman of the next plenary session, had decided after consultations with Mr Andrei Gromyko, Soviet Foreign Minister and co-chairman, to convene the next session tomorrow morning.

He added: "The United Kingdom and Soviet co-chairmen have agreed to send a joint message to the International Control Commission which will be dispatched tomorrow."

"The message reiterates the appeal of the co-chairmen to the parties in Laos made on April 24 to cooperate with the International Control Commission in exercising supervision and control over the ceasefire."

BACKSTAGE ACTIVITY

The cryptic and dramatic announcement came after a day of intensive backstage diplomatic activity starting with the arrival here by air from London of Lord Home for special talks with Mr Gromyko aimed at breaking the deadlock.

The conference has been adjourned since last Tuesday when it held its 13th session.

Since then Britain, France and the United States have been consulting their governments about what to do following last week's serious violations of the ceasefire by the pro-Communist Pathet Lao.

Final agreement to restart the conference came when Lord Home made a telephone call late tonight to Mr Gromyko to fix the terms of the message that they would send tomorrow to the Commission.

The British statesman's telephone conversation took place after he had held consultations over dinner with Mr Averell Harriman and Mr Jean Chuvet, chief of United States and French delegates. Sheriff escapes as bomb blast destroys his car

Mississippi City, June 11.

A bomb blasted to bits the private car of Sheriff Curtis O. Dedeaux early today, but he escaped with his life when he stayed at home.

The explosion hurled pieces of the car over a wide area near the two-story apartment home where the sheriff and two other families live.

Glass fragments shattered over beds in which his wife and two-year-old step-daughter slept. The blast damaged three parked cars and a nearby house.

An Air Force demolition expert from Keesler Air Force base said a preliminary inspection indicated someone attached a dynamite bomb to the frame of the car below the driver's seat.

THREE ATTEMPTS

It appeared to be a time bomb, from the force of the blast, the demolition expert said. Indications were as many as six sticks of dynamite may have been used.

Dedeaux, 40, said three attempts were made to get him into the car just prior to the explosion.

"I received three phone calls from unidentified individuals complaining of gambling activities at clubs on Highway US 90," he said.

In each case, the caller asked the sheriff to make a personal check. He sent deputies instead. They found no gambling, Dedeaux said.—AP.

Strike by 100,000 called off

Bombay, June 11.

An indefinite strike of 100,000 port and dock workers due to begin in Madras, Bombay and Calcutta after June 15 was called off today.

The unions had given notice of the strike, in support of wages and other demands, on June 1.

It was called off after union and government representatives had signed an agreement to abide by a report recently submitted by a government-appointed committee.

The report recommended a substantial pay rise for the workers and conceded most of their other demands.—Reuters.

14 guards swept away by current

Rawalpindi, June 11.

A river broke its banks and swept 14 caravan guards to their death in west Pakistan, according to reports reaching here today.

Early reports said the guards were travelling with a caravan along the upper Kaghan valley. They were asleep on the banks of the river Kunhar yesterday after a tiring day's journey when the river overflowed and engulfed them.

Police are reported to have recovered four bodies.—AP.

50 PEOPLE DIE IN IRAN EARTHQUAKE

Tehran, June 10.

An earthquake today killed 50 people and injured over 50 more at the village of Dekhouh some 16 miles from the south Persian township of Lar, it was announced here tonight.

The entire village was razed to the ground, and its 1,500 inhabitants fled to the open fields.

The 400 mud huts where they had lived were pulverised by the shock. Tents, blankets, medical supplies, and food were rushed from nearby towns and from Shiraz by road and air. Further supplies were going from the capital, the announcement said.

Nine injured

Doctors and rescue teams from nearby army units, went to the stricken area to help recover the dead and treat the injured.

Severe earth tremors also shook the township of Lar itself, injuring nine people and destroying mud huts which survived a violent earthquake in April last year.

The tremors were felt in a 100-mile radius of the township. Army units and Red Lion and Sun Society (Red Cross) workers have been told to be ready to rush first aid and supplies to villages if fresh shocks occur.

Bodies recovered

The population of Lar is being moved to a new town of brick houses under construction nearby. The new town was not damaged in today's tremors according to Mr Hossein Khatibi, director of the Red Lion and Sun Society.

He added that casualties would have been very great if the shocks had occurred at night instead of at 0822 am (0552 AP).

BASHIR AND THE HAND-SHAKING TEXAN VISITOR

Washington, June 11.
Questions of the hour around US Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson's office:

Is Bashir, the poor camel-cart driver from Pakistan, really going to take Johnson up on an invitation to visit the United States?

If Bashir does come, will he want to bring his camel along?

Johnson himself doesn't know the answers to these questions. But he would like to.

When the Vice President was in Pakistan on his South East Asia tour, he took off in Texas style on a shirt-sleeved, handshaking tour through the crowd of natives who turned out to greet him.

He came first to the camel-drawn cart of Bashir and halted for a moment of conversation through an interpreter. Photographers snapped the tall Vice President and the ill-clad Bashir, who for the first time in his life was having his picture made. In his free-handed way Johnson invited Bashir to visit him in the United States.

Perhaps the Vice President, in his busy rounds, later may have let the matter slip his mind.

The simple approach poses a problem

But back in Pakistan they have not forgotten. On Johnson's desk the other day, aides placed a translation of a column written in the Urdu language by Ibrahim Jalis for Jang, the largest daily newspaper in Pakistan.

Jalis, who describes himself as a "special friend of the American people and a thoughtful enemy of the American Government," was lavish in his praise of the Vice President for making immediate contact with the common people.

"Even before going to call on President Mohammad Ayub Khan," Jalis wrote, "he took the hand of a poor camel-cart driver, Bashir, made his way into the middle of a crowd of people to talk to them."

So in Pakistan they have no doubt that Bashir soon will be whisked to the United States to live for at least a little while a life of luxury he has never known.

The trouble is, Johnson doesn't know whether Bashir is coming or when he is coming or whether the cart driver can be induced to take leave of his camel even temporarily. Nor is the Vice President sure about how Bashir expects to have his transportation paid—if he does.

"If he comes," Johnson said smilingly, "he will get the best welcome we can give him. We'll show him Washington and I'll do my best to get him a room at the Waldorf-Astoria."

Suppose a message came through from Bashir saying: "Have camel, will travel."

"Well," the Vice President frowned, "that just might present a few problems." —AP.

THE EARL'S EXPERIMENT WITH A BOTTLE

London, June 11.
A 52-year-old Irish peer, the Earl of Arran, went to Scotland Yard and drank a quarter of a bottle of whisky at the State's expense in undergoing tests for drunkenness.

He had accepted a challenge from Lord Halsam, Lord President of the Council, to have a series of official tests after he had protested that a bill providing for blood and breath tests for car drivers accused of dangerous driving was unfair.

Lord Arran told the House of Lords last April that private experiments showed he had alcohol in his blood even though he had not had a drink for 12 hours.

RESULTS

Lord Arran later disclosed the results of the Scotland Yard tests, which were attended by a doctor from the Government Medical Research Council.

Three observers, he said, were satisfied that he showed evidence of being under the influence of alcohol, but that, normally, he was not in danger of being charged with being under the influence to such an extent as to be incapable of having proper charge of a car.

Lord Arran would not say if it would be safe for someone less accustomed to alcohol to drive after half the quantity of whisky he had taken. —China Mail Special.

Laotian delegates may hold a 'summit'

Geneva, June 11.

A "summit" meeting of the three main Laotian parties is expected to be held in Zurich shortly, authoritative sources said here tonight.

The principal participants at such a "summit" would be Prince Boun Oum, right-wing Prime Minister of the Royal Lao government; Prince Souvanna Phouma, neutralist leader; and Prince Souphanouvong, half-brother of Prince Souvanna Phouma and leader of the pro-Communist Pathet Lao.

The main purpose of the projected "summit" would be to try and form a coalition government of national unity for the Indochina Kingdom.

Formation

Both East and West at the 14-power Laos conference have said that the formation of a united Laotian government was an internal question for the Laotian peoples themselves to decide.

Prince Boun Oum is at present in Nice, southern France, while Prince Souvanna Phouma and Prince Souphanouvong are in Geneva.

For weeks Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Cambodian Head of State, has been trying to bring about a three-party Laotian "summit" meeting.

Prince Sihanouk had first suggested that the "summit" be held at Nice, where he is at present staying.

The neutralist and Pathet Lao princes had proposed Phnom Penh, capital of Cambodia, or Geneva.

Mr V. K. Krishna Menon, Indian Defence Minister and chief delegate to the 14-power Laos conference, today held day-long discussions with Prince Sihanouk in Nice. They were understood to have discussed as a compromise venue the possibility of the "summit" being held in Zurich, which is in a neutral country and yet away from the site of the 14-power conference.

Mr Menon flew back to Geneva tonight and drew straight from the airport to call on Prince Souvanna Phouma.

The sources said that the neutralist Prince had given his approval to Zurich being the site of the suggested summit. This, according to the sources, was also acceptable to Prince Souphanouvong and Prince Boun Oum.

The sources said that the date of the start of the summit and its agenda had yet to be decided.

But one Laotian source said that the "summit" meeting could open even tomorrow afternoon or on Tuesday.

Before Mr Menon flew to Nice this morning he had held consultations with Prince Souvanna Phouma and Prince Souphanouvong, who were his dinner guests here last night.

Prince Boun Oum will hold talks with Prince Sihanouk in Nice tomorrow following the discussion here tonight between Mr Menon and Prince Souvanna Phouma. —Reuters.

Russians plan big blast in the Uzbek

Moscow, June 11.

More than 30,000 tons of explosive will soon be detonated in a single blast on a mountainside in the Uzbek Soviet Socialist Republic, the Soviet news agency Tass reported today. Seismographic stations around the world will be able to record the blast.

The Tass agency said that this "peaceful explosion" would hurl 30,000 tons of mineral rich rock into the air. The explosion will be set off in the Tain Chan Mountains of Uzbekistan.

Tass said the explosion would make it possible to save 4,000,000 roubles in mining operations.

It said it was the first time in history that 30,000 tons of explosive would be detonated at once. —AP.

New phase in struggle for Germany

USSR proposal is no solution, says Brandt

Berlin, June 11.

Mr Willy Brandt, the governing mayor of West Berlin, said here tonight a German peace treaty without prior reunification was "no solution" to the German problem.

He was commenting in a radio broadcast on the memorandum on Germany handed to President Kennedy in Vienna last weekend and published by Tass last night.

"The Soviet Union wants a Western signature for the division of Germany," he added. Mr Brandt said it was obvious that a "new and very important" phase in the struggle for Germany had begun.

PRE-WAR LEVEL

Dr Konrad Adenauer, the West German Chancellor, said at Bamberg, Bavaria, that Russia wanted to put the German people back to the level they were on at the end of the war.

But West Germany wanted negotiations, not war, he added. And he said he hoped the Vienna meeting between President Kennedy and Mr Nikita Khrushchev would result in further talks.

Mr Brandt rejected Soviet proposals for negotiations between the two Germanies because the East German government was "in a regime supported by foreign bayonets."

"To stabilise the position in Europe the four powers should agree on the principles of a peace treaty for all Germany," the technicalities of which the German authorities would be able to carry out.

On the question of Soviet threats to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany and turn West Berlin into a free city, Mr Brandt said the West should "never yield to Soviet threats."

"In this the Soviet Union should itself take into account the risk of unilateral illegal acts."

"The Soviet Union has itself recognised the legal basis on which the allies are in Berlin."

REPETITION

"Any unilateral breach of this law which the West might accept would be a repetition of the unfortunate Munich Treaty of 1938 with all its appalling consequences. I am convinced this will not happen," he declared.

Mr Brandt rejected Soviet and East German protests against committee meetings of the West German Houses of Parliament in West Berlin.

"There will be no provocations from West Berlin," he said, "but we would be forgetting the lessons of the past and be acting as weaklings if we took flight at unjustified protests and brought about a position which the Soviet Union itself wants." —Reuters.

Pan Am claims record flight

The plane, piloted by Capt. John S. Rowe and carrying 103 passengers and a crew of 10, covered the 4,000 miles in 6 hours and 48 minutes.

This was 7 minutes under the mark set last September by Pan American. The scheduled flight time is 7 hours and 50 minutes. —UPI.

END OF THE SUNDAY DISPATCH

London, June 11.

The Sunday Dispatch, a British national Sunday newspaper is "very shortly" to be merged with Lord Beaverbrook's Sunday Express, Mr R. A. Redhead, Managing Director of Associated Newspapers Ltd, announced tonight.

The 169-year-old Sunday Dispatch, whose circulation is about 1,520,000 will be the fourth British national newspaper to close within the last year.

Tonight's announcement ends a week of speculation over its future.

The Sunday Express has a circulation of about 3,000,000.

Mr Redhead's statement said in parts:

"The Directors of Associated Newspapers Ltd have, for some time, regarded with concern the rising losses of the Sunday Dispatch which reached, in the last 12 months, almost £200,000."

"In spite of the loyal and able efforts of the present editor, executive and staff of all departments, the Sunday Dispatch has become a victim in the highly competitive Sunday national newspaper field."

"In the view of the Directors it would need over the next three or four years an expenditure each year of more than £1,000,000 in order to try to put the Sunday Dispatch in a competitive position with its rivals, and even then the chances of succeeding would be very slender."

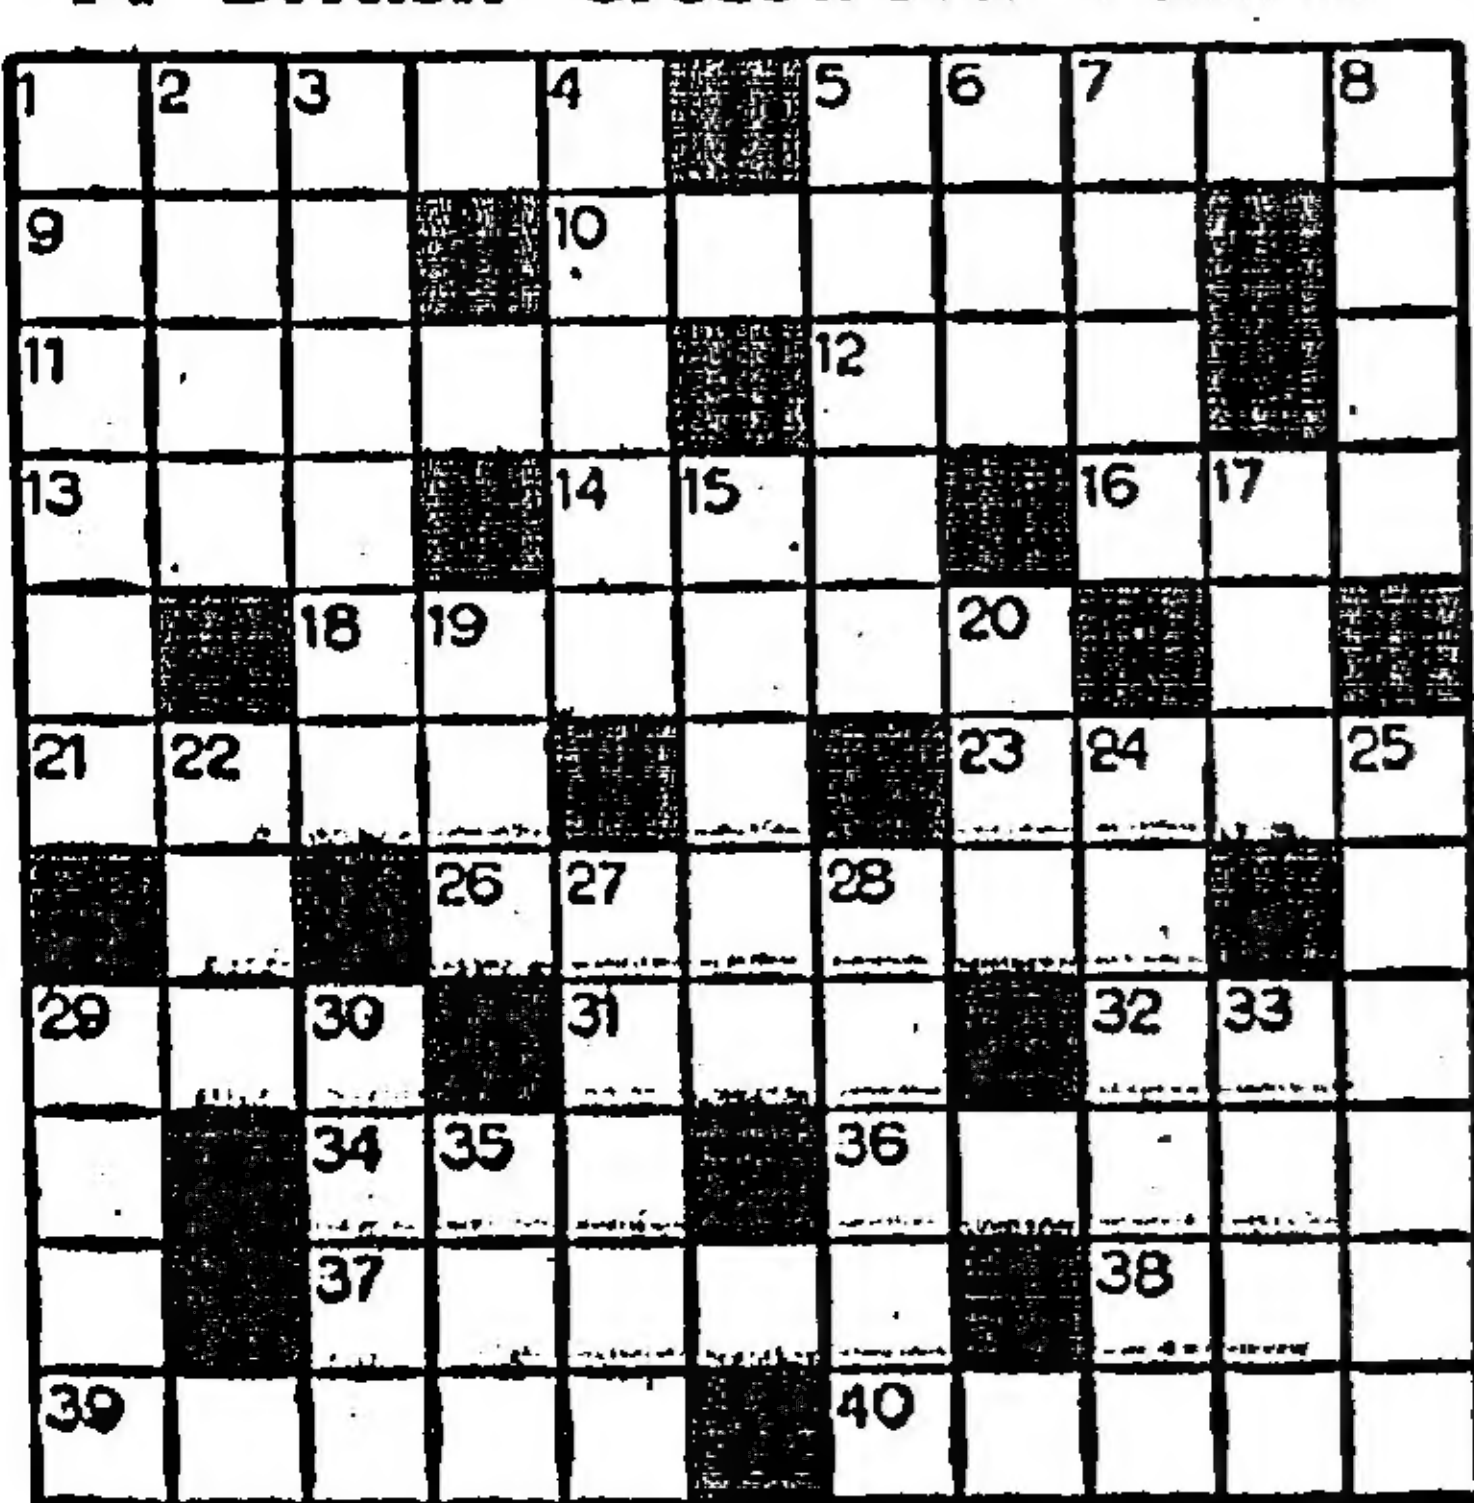

"Accordingly, they have regretfully decided that it would be wrong for the company to continue to sustain such a heavy loss which, of course, has had to be borne by its other newspapers. Therefore the Sunday Dispatch can no longer exist as a separate entity." —Reuters.

The Yard loses two top men

A royal reception for the Kellys

Dublin, June 11. After the Kennedys, it was the Kellys turn today. Princess Grace of Monaco, the former Grace Kelly of Philadelphia, and her husband, Prince Rainier of Monaco, were getting a royal reception in Ireland. After a cheering airport welcome from 10,000 Irish men and women headed by Premier Sean Lemass last night, their Serene Highnesses today drove through festive, flag-decked streets. They were on their way to visit the National Stud Farm, on which Ireland's thriving racehorse industry is founded. Their progress through the streets was greeted with cheers and shouts of "Up the Kellys." This branch of the Kelly family can be traced far back. Some 60 years ago, Princess Grace's grandfather was a penniless steerage immigrant to the United States from County Mayo.—UPI.

England's smallest cinema

London, June 11. What is believed to be England's smallest cinema, the 175-seat Ideal has reopened in Lavenham, Suffolk, with a picturesque touch of a bygone age in the form of a town crier to advertise the films. Town criers were used to convey news before the days of printing placards and newspapers, radio or loudspeaker. For the three nights that the Ideal cinema opens here each week, 72-year-old Bob Lambert stands outside in his uniform crying "Oh yez, o yez..." the traditional opening utterance of the town crier. Victor Cox the owner of the cinema which closed for repairs over a year ago claims that the town crier "is drawing the people in."—China Mail Special.

The 270,000 strong National Association of Local Government Officers which has never had a strike in its 56 years history has voted overwhelmingly to write a strike clause into their constitution. Mr Albert E. Nortrop, a deputy education officer proposing the executives resolution at the association's annual conference here, said it was because the executive council was so convinced that the need for withdrawal of labour on a large scale would not arise that they were able to make the proposal devoid of all the complications of a financial levy and other embellishment. "You can confidently assume your council will not act irresponsibly," he said.—China Mail Special.

Mrs Kennedy greeted by Greek President

Athens, June 11. America's first lady Mrs Jacqueline Kennedy arrived today at Cape Sounion, about 38 miles from Athens, after a cruise on the Aegean Sea. Greek President and Mrs Constantine Karamanlis welcomed her on arrival and accompanied her to the ruins of the Poseidon Temple at sunset. Mrs Kennedy is vacationing in Greece after having accompanied her husband, President Kennedy, on his trips to Paris, Vienna and London.—AFP.

"Iron Man" Chief Superintendent Herbert Sparks, feared throughout London's underworld as head of Scotland Yard's Flying squad, has resigned.

But the detective who earned the nickname of "Iron Man" from criminals when he served in London's West End will not go into retirement. Later this month he will join Barclays Bank, one of Britain's main banks, where he will be right hand man to the two security chiefs responsible for the protection of staff at 2,300 branches throughout Britain. A bank spokesman said: "his experience will be of mutual help in ensuring closest possible co-operation with the police."

27 COMMENDATIONS

Burly 54-year-old Mr Sparks joined the police in 1927 and during his career won 27 commendations for his work from magistrates, judges and police commissioners. Barclays Bank is believed to be the first to take a high ranking police officer on to its staff to help with security. Thieves tried to break into Barclays branches 16 times last year. They succeeded on three occasions. Within hours of the announcement of Chief Superintendent Sparks' resignation came news that another of London's top detectives—Chief Superintendent William Stone—was also leaving the police force to join a bank.

MUCH CONCERN

Superintendent Stone, head of number four, District Criminal Investigation Department, will start his new job as Chief Security Officer to the Westminster Bank on August 1. Superintendent Stone, 52 and one of Scotland Yard's "Big Five" will leave the job of organising security throughout Westminster Bank branches. Not for many years have the resignations of two of the Yard's top detectives been announced within such a short time. "There was much concern among senior officers at Scotland Yard at the loss of two detectives of such experience," China Mail Special.

Slogans attack priest

London, June 11. Slogans saying "Nigger-loving priest" and "Racemixing priest" were painted early today on the wall and sidewalks outside a suburban Anglican (Church of England) clergyman's home. The Rev. Clifford Hill told his High Cross Church congregation—most of them coloured—two weeks ago that he would "rather my daughter marry a coloured Christian than a pagan English boy." Hill was away on vacation today. A church spokesman said it was the first sign of trouble since Hill's controversial sermon. "We had the words removed the police," the spokesman said.—UPI.

Holmes in Iran

Teheran, June 11. Julius C. Holmes, new US Ambassador to Iran, arrived by plane today. After a greeting by Iranian Foreign Ministry and US Embassy officials, Holmes said the United States was watching government developments in Iran closely and was prepared to help.—UPI.

Bodyguard of Prince Charles retires

London, June 11. The man who for the past eight years has been bodyguard to Prince Charles, 12-year-old son of the Queen and heir to the throne, retired yesterday.

Police Constable Reginald G. Summers went to Buckingham Palace to receive the Queen's thanks for his vigilance since he was seconded to the Palace police in 1957 and was chosen to guard Charles since 1953. When the Prince went to Cheam School in September 1957 Constable Summers lived at the school for several months until the Queen decided the security arrangements were satisfactory without his being there all the time. But he still had to spend weekends at Cheam. In 1958 he was awarded the Royal Victorian Medal—China Mail Special.

Sabre jets in non-stop U.S.-UK flight

London, June 11. Two squadrons of USAF F-100 Super Sabres yesterday landed in Britain after completing a non-stop flight of more than 3,500 miles across the Atlantic from bases in the United States. Refuelling took place in the air.

Third Air Force Headquarters at Ruislip said the exercise was intended to demonstrate the capability of tactical aircraft to deploy quickly from U.S. bases to European stations via the northern air route. One squadron flew from Cannon, New Mexico, to Wethersfield, Essex. The second flew from Myrtle beach, North Carolina, and landed at Woodbridge, Suffolk. Throughout the flight, the aircraft were monitored and controlled by the air operations centre at headquarters, Twelfth Air Force, Waco, Texas. The squadrons make the return flight in a few days.—AFP.

Govt plan for Covent Garden

London, June 11. Covent Garden Opera House, the home of opera in Britain, may at last get rehearsal rooms. The Government has told the House of Lords. This will be through the rebuilding of the neighbouring Covent Garden vegetable and horticultural market, which is planned. Lord Mancroft, a Conservative peer, said he understood that when the opera house was built no place was provided for rehearsal rooms because in those days it was not considered necessary to rehearse. The east orchestra and ballet dancers had to go to another part of London when they wanted to rehearse and still did, he said.—China Mail Special.

42 old manuscripts sold for £111,105

London, June 11. Lord Tollemache, big British brewery chief, raised £111,105 here when he sold 42 valuable old manuscripts and printed books from the library at Helmingham Hall, the Tollemache family home in Suffolk.

The most sought-after piece in the sale, a 15th century English herbal and bestiary alphabet, a remarkable example of the art of the time, went for £33,000 after remarkable bidding by dealers and collectors.

The work, consisting of 49 drawings of animals and birds chiefly arranged four to a page, is apparently the only mediaeval bestiary in private hands in England.

The drawings are on both sides of 19 vellum folios leaves and provide an interesting record of popular ideas of natural history at the time.

POETRY

A 15th century French manuscript of poetry and prose went for £17,000, and Mr John Fleming, of New York, gave £8,500 for an unrecorded manuscript of Sir Philip Sidney's "Arcadia" and his masque "The Lady of May," and £4,000 for a complete first edition of the bible printed abroad in 1535.

Helmingham Hall, home of the 51-year-old baron, is one of the finest Elizabethan houses in Britain and its library dates in part from the 16th century. Two of the manuscripts in the sale, and possibly others as well, were probably acquired after King Henry Eighth's dissolution of the monasteries.—China Mail Special.

THOMAS WISEMAN'S Limelight

Robert Ryan talks about the problems of portraying the villain...

ROBERT RYAN is an actor who has taken the glamour out of villainy.

Unlike James Cagney, Humphrey Bogart, Edward G. Robinson — who had the knack of making killers likeable — Mr Ryan makes his villains eminently hateable.

Women never write to him, as they did to James Cagney, saying that they, too, would like to be slapped around by him. Mr Ryan has taken the sexiness out of villainy.

His performances have spanned the whole gamut of villainy: he has been an anti-Semite (in Crossfire), a Negro-hater (in Odds Against Tomorrow), a killer in many films.

"In fact," said Mr Ryan when I saw him in London the other day, "I have been in films pretty well everything I am dedicated to fighting in life."

For the notable villain of the screen is in private life a prominent campaigner for Negro rights, for racial tolerance, for nuclear disarmament.

On the screen he specialises in portraying tough, raw, near-murderous characters; in fact, he is a university graduate, a Shakespearean actor—he played Antony to Katharine Hepburn's Cleopatra at America's Stratford recently.

A CONTRAST

His manner, on meeting him, is relaxed, pleasant, un-murderous—a notable contrast to the manner of some prominent screen heroes that I have encountered.

"Some of the most lovable actors on the screen," said Mr Ryan, "are people who are in love with themselves. They are often the sort of people with whom nobody else would conceivably be in love.

"What is described as a magnetic screen personality is often merely the outward manifestation of an intense and abiding self-love."

"This is something I don't have. That may or may not be the reason why I am not and never have been a romantic star."

Despite this acknowledged lack of romantic appeal, Mr Ryan is a rich and successful man. "I got paid $50,000 dollars for a week's work playing John the Baptist in King of Kings," he said, "and it is possible that I actually have more money than some of the dolled stars—simply because living up to being an idol is an expensive business."

"Not being an idol I don't have to live ostentatiously. And I get a great deal of work because there is an enormous shortage of actors of around my age—50. They're all either 25 or 30."

This is a somewhat excessively modest way of accounting for his success and it is certainly not just because he is in the right age-group that Peter Ustinov has cast Mr Ryan in his production of Billy Budd.

THE SMILES

"Lately," said Mr Ryan, "I have been getting more interesting parts to play. It may have started with God's Little Acre, which showed I could do other things apart from playing psychopathic killers."

"Then I was asked to play John the Baptist and that made a lot of people smile. Me playing John the Baptist and Jeffrey Hunter playing Christ—people imagined the film would be a big laugh. Actually I think it has turned out a very good film."

Robert Ryan is in many ways an unusual actor to have come out of Hollywood and one of the most unusual things about him is that he has been married for 22 years to the same woman.

Movie-acting—especially in America—tends to create almost total self-interest. And if that's the case how the hell are you going to stay interested in one woman for any length of time.

WHEN I met Miss Anne Aubrey in the past I had always been struck by her self-sacrificing dedication to a film career that had not seemed to me worth making all that many sacrifices for.

Miss Aubrey had to be careful about what she ate because of a tendency to put on weight, she had to be careful about what she said because her bosses at Warwick Films might disapprove, she hardly ever went out anywhere without a publicity man in attendance to chaperon her and guide her.

She had neither the time nor the opportunity to fall in love. This might sound like quite a high price to pay for the possibility of film stardom but Miss Aubrey always asserted that it was the kind of life she wanted.

Recently Miss Aubrey revealed herself in a new light. Her contract with Warwick is being brought to an end by mutual agreement very soon and Miss Aubrey declared delightedly that at last she felt free.

SO DIFFERENT

"I always used to have to do what I was told," she said "but now I can do absolutely what I like. I can go to Timbuktu if I want to."

SAME LOOK

WHEN IT WAS announced that Sir Alec Guinness, an actor noted for the infinite variety of his faces was going to play a Japanese in A Majority of One, one expected some remarkable facial disguise. But as my picture indicates Alec Guinness as a Japanese looks just like Alec Guinness.

Anne Aubrey: After the strictures of being turned into a glamorous myth—freedom to do what she likes... See ANNE GETS A BREAK.

"All the time I was under contract they were trying to turn me into something I never was, into some kind of glamorous myth. They would employ a make-up man to put a new face on me and they'd light me in a special way and nobody ever recognised me off the screen because the person they were presenting to the public was so totally different to me."

"They tried to change every thing about me, the way I talked and walked and behaved. I hated all that. I loathed it. But I had to put up with it. I had to put up with being told what to do and what to say to the Press."

"There were advantages to being under contract," said Miss Aubrey, "I made 15 films, I have security now. I've just bought myself a flat in Putney for £7,000, I've got a car and a mink coat and enough money to live on for two years."

"And I've also got a big film. The Hellers to come out this year which I'm hoping will bring me in a lot of offers."

While she is waiting for these offers Miss Aubrey is going to work at Ipswich Rep. for a salary of around £12 a week. (At Warwick she got around £200 a week.)

"I shall not be going there as a film star," she said, "I shan't take my mink and I shan't expect to do whatever everyone else does—even sweep the stage."

What has happened to transform Miss Aubrey? Somewhat bashfully she admitted to having fallen in love with an actor, and that it was "marriage-serious."

I had realised that something pretty drastic must have happened to her. She had eaten a hearty lunch without once counting the calories.

THE STRAIN OF A POOLS WIN TO BE PROBED

By PETER FAIRLEY

WHAT happens in the mind of a boy when his father wins £75,000 on the pools? Or when he loses his job? Are sixth formers under a special strain. Is day-dreaming good or bad for a person?

There are some of the problems to be tackled by a new research department, the first of its kind in the world, to be set up at Bristol University. Its aim will be to prevent mental breakdowns. It will have a professor and staff of 14.

Work will start at once with a £60,000 grant from the Van Nette Foundation, of which Dr C. P. Stevens, director of the National Spastics Society is a trustee.

Dr Stevens told me: "We do not know enough about social, environmental or family stresses which may cause mental illness. For instance, is a strain placed on older grammar school pupils by the school system itself? What effect does sudden reduction of family income have?"

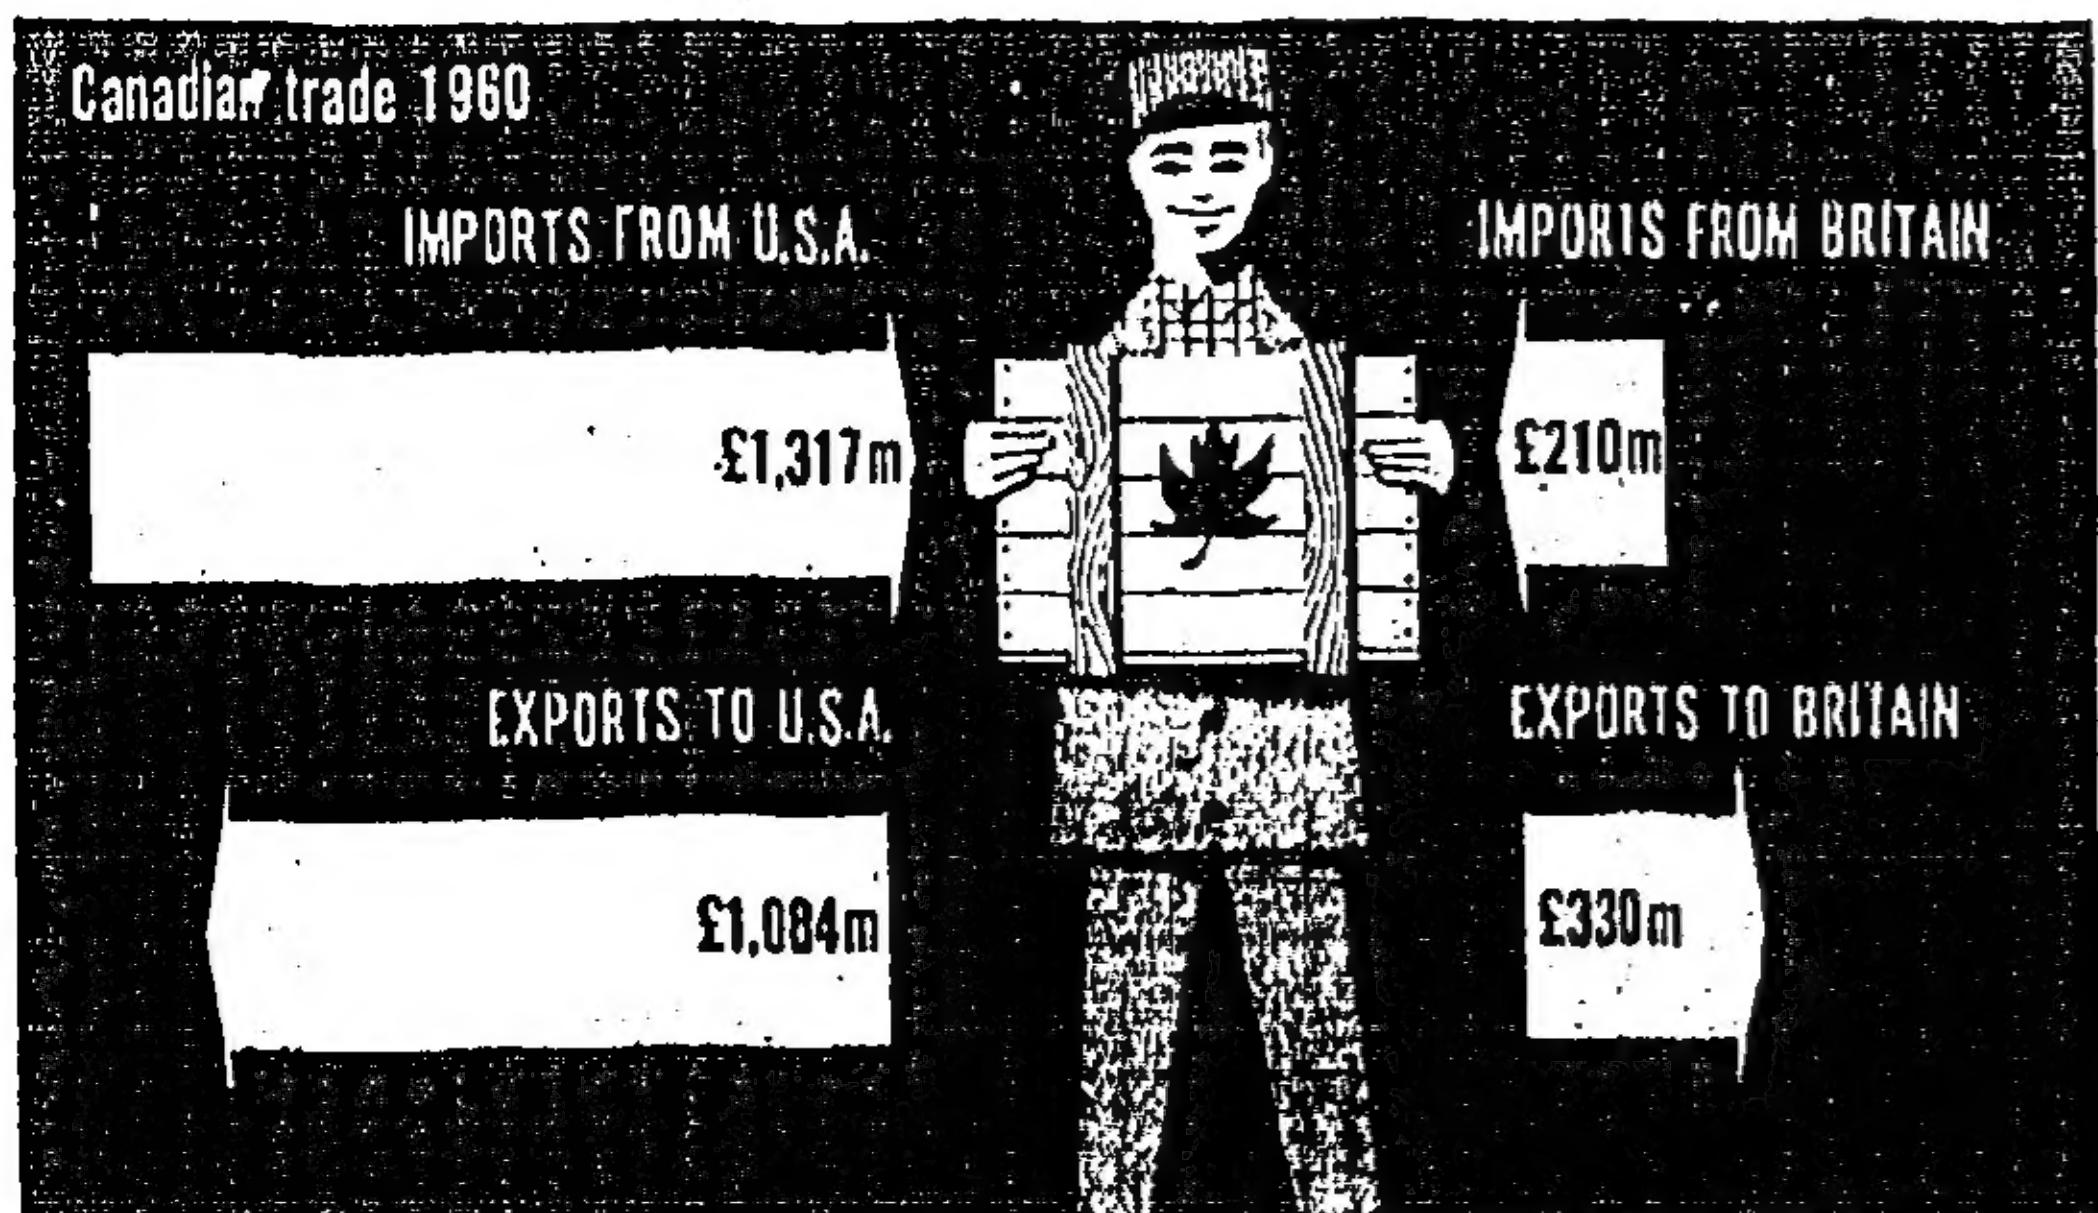

"We do not know whether the considerable habit of day-dreaming about the future is good or bad, nor what effect it has on an ordinary person's ability to withstand the ordinary stresses of life."

Dr Stevens added: "Most psychiatric departments are, of necessity, mainly concerned with the treatment of established illness. This department will make possible a research programme into the problem of maintaining mental health."

The ever-growing market that welcomes Britain

HERE is the picture of Canadian trade with the U.S. and Britain.

It was outlined by Mr. George Drew, Canadian High Commissioner, speaking in London. It shows that:

CANADA has the largest percentage population increase of any industrial nation in the world. That means she is a large and growing potential market.

She imports today goods worth more than half of the TOTAL exports of Britain. It would help Britain and Canada if Britain sold Canada large quantities of products at present bought from the U.S.

It could also give Britain a favourable trade balance with Canada, and restore Canada's trade balance with the United States.

CANADA, after Russia, has the largest concentration of natural resources in the world. And the soil is capable ultimately of feeding 200 million people.

AMERICAN NEWSLETTER

PRESIDENT KENNEDY has just announced that America's battles are won on the tough football playing field of Hyannisport. Knowing the kind of battles we have won on the playing fields of Etou I have come up to see this strange and salty terrain.

For it is as well that we should all know and understand the country the brisk young President hails from. It is as different from the Baby-lonic towers of New York as Hawaii is from the Isle of Mull.

THE NAME

Cape Cod stretches out from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts into the Atlantic for 70 long miles. It is shaped like a flaccid but flexed arm.

The English navigator Bartholomew Gosnell called it Shoal Hope when he first sighted it in 1602, but after a few months of fishing its waters he wrote in his log book: "Near this cape we took great store of cod fish, for which we altered the name to Cape Cod."

Until this century Cape Codders paid little attention to inland America.

They are sea people with sea-going ways. The Pilgrim Fathers, mostly farmers by birth, had struggled to clear and plant the land but the Red Indians soon taught them to turn to the net for their livelihood.

So Cape Codders grew up with the sea. The most daring became sea captain adventurers to the East and West Indies. Others became whalers and deep sea fishermen.

THE DUNES

This is the land of Melville's Moby Dick. It is a sandy land of wild, rounded dunes, hundreds of feet high and miles deep, looking like pale shifting moonscapes.

It is the land of savage, knife-like grasses, and silver drift-wood. It is the land of pine trees, sweet ferns, bay berries, crab apples and the Japanese quince. In the bushes turk oven birds, even the trimly swifts, the red-eyed vireos and the bobolinks. Across the marshlands cry the whip-poor-wills and the wood peckers.

Here it is the custom to plant a maple tree when your child is born, an oak tree when your grandchild is born and an elm tree for your first great-grandchild.

The jet black whales—enbalaena glacialis—50 feet long, gambol in the bay during this month. They are passing titans journeying from southern waters to Newfoundland and Greenland for a cool summer.

The country is dotted with windmills, for when the black-headed Americans in 1770 it became impossible for Cape

Codders to import salt to preserve their fish. A canny man named John Sears invented a contraption which was called "Sears folly." It consisted of a wooden trough which fostered solar evaporation of sea water and saved the fishing industry. The windmills were used to pump ocean water into these troughs.

THE HOUSES

The houses are made of wood and curiously shaped. There are three main kinds of Cape Cod houses, the half house, the three-quarter house and the full house.

Young couples started life with a half house (two windows at one side of the front door) and built on as the family and wealth increased.

So popular is the summer reason here that now Cape Codders add on room after room year after year all high-society-plagiarism.

Cape Codders are thrifty as the way of all sea people.

They specialise in hand-me-downs and after a whole family has worn a pullover it is ripped apart, washed, dried and made into a rug.

This is jam country, but do not expect to receive a jar of cranberry jelly from your Cape Cod friends.

The tart little cranberry was once called a crane berry and it grew in the crane-infested swamps. The Puritans, wishing to show King Charles their new realms of plenty, shipped the king ten barrels of their red crane berries. King Charles tasted one of the crane berries and said with a sour smile: "The cranes are welcome to the rest."

THE SEA

This is the land of the handsome young President Kennedy. He was brought up with the sound of the Atlantic Ocean beating against the shore beside him.

He sailed the sly little Cape Cod Cat boats and ran down the pale dunes. He looked for giant whales through binoculars and heard the cry of the whip-poor-wills across the marshlands as night fell.

He ate fresh lobster and fried scallop. He scoured for shells. He has the far-seeing blue eyes of a man born to the sea. He knows the dark of the rocks on deeper reefs.

It seems he should well understand we island people.

THE CAREFREE (3.2) DAYS....

STATISTICS are America's best friends. They must trust them with a touching faith. The latest statistics tell about the sad summer plight of female bookkeepers and secretaries.

Although they are given two weeks' vacation each year they actually get only 3.2 "effective" vacation days. The Statistics Tabulating Corporation arrived at this alarming truth by discovering that intense pressure before and after the holiday ruined the value of the holiday itself and left but 3.2 sandwiched days for carefree fun.

Just Fancy That!

MYSTERY: Who stole a policewoman's hat from Newcastle-upon-Tyne's central police station? It vanished from the top of a showcase in the station—and turned up again in a nearby public house.

THE University of Witwatersrand claims the world "bed-stacking" record from Oklahoma State College. Students packed 83 people on a 3ft. dormitory bed during the weekend. It collapsed under its six-and-three-quarter-ton load.

ARMEN at Finsbury H-bomber station, near Doncaster, have for months been painting and scraping to make the camp look like new, even wearing felt pads so that boots did not mark polished floors. Reason: an impending visit by Princess Margaret—now cancelled.

POLICE raided Branch 533 of the Royal Canadian Legion at Byron, Ontario, and carted off 59 cases of beer which the legion is forbidden to serve by local by-law. Branch president William Dennis sent a telegram begging the Queen to intervene because "we are being victimised by police action resulting from political nonsense."
